FNGAGED THROUGH PALMISTRY

Romantic Story of the Russell-Perugini Betrothal.

Rosina Vokes Still III in London-Other Stage News.

One of Miss Lillian Russell's nearest relatives has told the story of how the prima donna's engagement to the gallant sig. Giovanni Perugini was effected. The story is too good to be lost. Many a successful comic opera libretto has been built upon a less entertaining incident. It is, in fact, an illustration of a form of courtship which, after this publication, may become exceedingly popular. Here is the story: Since Perugini joined "The Princess Nicotine" company he has been in the habit of dining every Sunday night at Miss Russell's uptown house. One day he informed Miss Russell that a very clever psimist was a great friend of his, and asked her if he might bring him up to dinner on the following Sunday, Lillian was charmed. "Certainly," she said. "It day he informed Miss Russell that a very clever psimist was a great friend of his, and asked her if he might bring him up to disner on the following Sunday, Lillian was charmed. "Certainly," she said. "It will be lots of fun. I adore that kind of thing." Sunday arrived, and with it came Perugini and the palmist, They had a cosy little dinner served in Lillian's home, and after the meal Perugini suggested that the palmist should tell the prima donna's fortune. She was delighted, for, like most members of the thearrical profession, she is somewhat superstitious. The palmist, who was in a very good humor, as people sometimes are after they have neatly dined, set to work. He gravely examined Miss Russell's palm with its pretty lines. Then he went on to assure her that her fate was a marriage with a dark-haired tenor. The description of the tenor was a detailed one. It corresponded so exactly with Perugini, who was sitting beside her on the sofa, that he blushed and looked ineffably coy. Miss Russell accepted the palmist's story with the utmost profound attention. Later in the evening she took her sister Susie, who was in the room, to one side and whispered in her ear these words: "My dear, it's very strange, but I feel that my fate is to marry Perugini. I don't know why, but I firmly believe I shall." The sister laughed, but two or three days later, sure enough, the engagement was announced. This will certainly bring forward legions of unemployed palmists, who up to the present have been regarded as more ornamental than useful.

Miss Vokes and her husband have been heard from. They went to London as soon as they reached England, and are still there, as Miss Vokes is too ill to be moved. Her husband consulted one of the most eminent authorities in England, and the physician has held out a slight hope of her recovery—a very slight one. As, however, Miss Vokes had lost all hope, the words of the physician proved to be very comforting. As soon as she is able to leave London she will go to her country home in Devonshire.

Frank Blair, of comic opera renown, and his wife, Edith Murilla, are going to appear at B. F. Keith's Union Square Theatre shortly. And why not? As Mr. Blair very sensibly says: "I don't care to go into the farce-comedies of to-day, and comic opera engagements are very to go into the farce-comedies of to-day, and comic opera engagements are very few and far between. I'm not fond of living on my income. I'm offered a good salary, and I should be a fool not to accept it. Which is quite true. Vaudeville is all the rage to-day in this country and in England, where the very best people in the profession appear at the music halls and vaudeville shows.

A new comic song of English origin is now being sung by the Misses Meiville and Stetson, of Hopkins's Transocean-ics. Its sweet, poetic and pathetic title is. "It Isn't Always the Largest Hen That Lays the Largest Egg." Isn't that pretty?

"Miss Dollar" is the name of a new comic opera by Andre Messager and the Messrs. Clairville and Vallin, that has just been produced in Paris. Of course, the heroine is an American—or rather the French idea of what an American should be, for comic opera purposes.

Mrs. John Drew, in spite of her seven y-four years, is as active and energetity-four years, is as active and energetic at rehearsals as any young star. She wouldn't think of rehearsing by proxy. She attends to all the details of her productions, and is absolutely indefatigable. Next week she appears in "The Jealous Wife," in which she considers that she has a very good part.

"I think this scheme is practicable," said Mr. Freedman. "If not we will consider something else. I am getting tired of seeing people go past the Field to Van Cortlandt Lake, to skate. We did figure on artificial ice, but found that about 65,000 feet of pipe would be required, and that it would cost about 3100,000. Then we figured on putting in cakes of ice, flooding the crevices and getting a smooth surface that way, but that was found to be impracticable. We will have ice up there though, if they give us half a chance."

In this bout Atherton displayed great defensive tactics, but was compelled to give way to Connors's superior strength, and his (Connors) favorite hold, the hammer-lock. Conmirs won the second bout and the match in thirteen minutes and twenty-seven seconds, again using the hammer-lock successfully.
